- The Volga Vikings. 45 minute podcast from In Our Time Mere Melvyn Bragg and his guests discuss the Volga Vikings. Between the 8th and the 10th centuries AD, fierce Scandinavian warriors raided and then settled large swathes of Europe, particularly Britain, Ireland and parts of Northern France. These were the Vikings, and their story is well known today. far fewer people realise that groups of Norsemen also travelled east. These Volga Vikings also known as the Rus, crossed the Baltic into present-day Russia and the Ukraine and funded settlements there. They traded commodities including furs and slaves for Islamic silver, and penetrated so far east as to reach Baghdad. Their activities were documented by Arab scholars: one Ahmadi ibn Fadlan, recorded that the Volga Vikings he met were perfect physical specimens but also "the filthiest of God's creatures". Through trade and culture they brought West and East into regular contact; their story sheds light on both Scandinavian and early Islamic history. http://www.bbc.co.uk/podcasts/series/ioth/all

- The Greenlanders Arctic whaleships and whalers. From 1750 to the early 20th century, fleets of 'Greenlanders' specially strengthened sailing ships headed north each spring from Britain to the ice-filled Arctic seas between Canada, Greenland and Spitsbergen. Their business was whaling, their purpose to bring home oil and whalebone raw materials for Britain's growing industries. Arctic whaling involved more than 9000 voyages from 35 British ports: Rotherhith's 'Greenland Dock' is a reminder that London was a prominent whaling port. Each voyage involved dangers unique to the trade, demanding extraordinary measures of skills and seamanship. Dr Stonehouse tells of the ships, the men, and the profits and losses of a long-forgotten industry in this 51 minute long lecture. http://www.gresham.ac.uk/lectures-and-events/the-greenlanders-arctic-whaleships-and-whalers
